WHAT IS DISTANCE EDUCATION?

Distance education, also called online education for Internet-based learning, is designed for learners who live at a distance from educational providers and/or institutions. It is the enrollment and study with an educational institution that provides organized, formal learning opportunities for students. Presented in a sequential and logical order, the instruction is offered wholly or primarily by distance study, through virtually any media. Historically, its predominant medium of instruction has been printed materials, however, it may incorporate or make use of videotapes, CD or DVD ROM's, audio recordings, facsimiles, telephone communications, e-mail, and Web-based delivery systems through the Internet. The student completes each lesson or segment and submits it for correction, grading, comment, and guidance by a qualified instructor.

WHAT ACCREDITATION MEANS

Accreditation in the United States is a means to assure and improve higher education quality, assisting institutions and programs using a set of standards developed by peers. An institution or program that has successfully completed an accreditation review has in place the needed instructional, student support and other services to assist students to achieve their educational goals. Accreditation has helped to provide the conditions necessary for the United States to develop diverse, flexible, robust and often admired higher education.

Accreditation is a both a process and a status. It is the process of reviewing schools, colleges, universities, institutions and programs to judge their educational quality – how well they serve students and society. The result of the process, if successful, is the award of “accredited status.”

Accreditation is carried out through nongovernmental organizations created in whole or in part by the higher education community. Some accrediting organizations review colleges and universities. Others review specific programs, e.g., law, medicine, engineering. In a number of fields, especially the health professions, graduation from an accredited program is a requirement for receiving a license to practice. At present, 80 recognized organizations accredit more than 7,000 institutions and 19,000 programs serving more than 24 million students. The Accrediting Commission of the DETC is one of the 80 accrediting associations in the U.S., but it is unique among associations in that it is the only one whose scope of activity is focused solely on distance education institutions. It is also the only accrediting body whose scope is defined by the method of teaching—distance—used by a school or college, as compared to geographic area or academic subject field.

All accrediting organizations create and use specific standards both to assure that institutions and programs meet threshold expectations of quality and to assure that they improve over time. These standards address key areas such as faculty, student support services, finance and facilities, curricula and student learning outcomes.

All accrediting organizations use common practices, including a self evaluation by the institution against published standards, an on-site visit by an evaluation team of peer experts and a subsequent review and decision by the accrediting body about accredited status. This review is repeated every five years if the institution is to sustain its accreditation.

Reliable accrediting organizations are themselves subject to external review; a process is called “recognition.” This involves periodic examination of the organizations based on a set of standards; the external examination is carried out by the U.S. Department of Education or, in the private sector, the Council for Higher Education Accreditation.

Distance education accreditation is certification by a recognized body that a distance education institution has undergone a comprehensive study and peer examination that demonstrates that the institution does in fact meet the established standards. An institution must:

- have a clearly defined and stated mission, goals, and objectives;
- have reasonably attainable and clearly stated educational objectives, and educationally sound and up-to-date programs;
- provide satisfactory educational services;
- offer adequate student services;
- have demonstrated ample student satisfaction and achievement, and have an outcomes assessment plan;
- document student attainment of learning outcomes;
- have qualified faculty and competent administrators and staff;
- have fair admission policies and adequate enrollment agreements;
- advertise its programs truthfully;
- be financially able to deliver high quality educational programs;
- have fair and equitable tuition refund policies;
- have adequate facility, equipment, and record protection; and
- conduct continuous research and self-improvement studies.

DETC ACCREDITING COMMISSION

The Distance Education and Training Council was founded in 1926 under the name “National Home Study Council.” As a voluntary association of what were then known as correspondence schools, the Council decided to further improve its procedures for membership, and in 1955 the Accrediting Commission was formed.

DETC 2010-2011 Directory of Accredited Institutions

The DETC Accrediting Commission performs the institutional accrediting functions of the Distance Education and Training Council. Its mission is to promote, by means of standard-setting, evaluation, and consultation processes, the development and maintenance of high educational and ethical standards in education and training programs delivered through distance learning. The DETC Accrediting Commission identifies and accredits distance education and training institutions that have attained and maintained the established standards. Its accrediting program employs procedures similar to those of other nationally recognized accrediting associations.

SCOPE AND RECOGNITION

The DETC Accrediting Commission is recognized by the U.S. Secretary of Education and the Council for Higher Education Accreditation (CHEA).

DETC's scope of recognition by the U.S. Secretary of Education is: *The accreditation of postsecondary institutions in the United States that offer degree programs primarily by the distance education method from the associates up to and including the professional doctoral degree, and are specifically certified by the agency as accredited for Title IV purposes; and the accreditation of postsecondary institutions in the United States not participating in Title IV that offer programs primarily by the distance education method up through the professional doctoral degrees.*¹

DETC's scope as recognized by CHEA is: The accreditation of higher learning institutions that offer programs of study that are delivered primarily by distance (51 percent or more) through distance learning and award credentials through the master's and first professional degrees.

¹DETC defines "professional doctoral degree" to mean a post-master's graduate level degree that prepares individuals through internships, practical application of training, and/or specialized certifications, for professional practice (such as the Doctor of Business Administration), as opposed to research methodologies that are associated with academic doctorate degrees (such as the Doctor of Philosophy).

THE COMMISSIONERS

The DETC Accrediting Commission has nine members and its makeup includes people with either academic or administrative expertise, or both. Four of the Commissioners are from outside the field and represent the public, and five Commissioners are from DETC member institutions. Presently, the members of the Commission are:

Dr. Timothy Mott, Chair, Associate Provost, Union Institute & University

Dr. David W. Curd, Vice Chair, President, Harrison Middleton University

Ms. Mary Adams, President, American Sentinel University

Dr. Josette P. Katz, Professor, Atlantic Cape Community College

Ms. Carol S. Osborn, Deputy Director, DANTES (retired)
